Idioms are an important part of everyday life. Idioms are used to express complex ideas simply, sometimes idioms also add humor to the person's writing/speech. Not just English, Idioms are used in almost every language. Idioms don't have their literal meaning but act as a metaphor, one needs to know the meaning of idioms to use or understand them. For example:- "Time is Money" is a dime a dozen, one of the most commonly used idiom, it doesn't mean that time can be money but it means that time is important and can be important as money. Another idiom that is often used is "Cut the crap" which doesn't mean to cut something it simply saying to get to the point.

Idioms are commonly used in everyday life by native speakers. Therefore idioms are important for us to learn and at least one should know the meaning of common idioms which are used in day-to-day life.

Idioms keep your reader simulated and make your writing/speech more interesting and efficient for the reader. It gives them an extra second to think and appreciate your thoughts.

Idioms also give you a new way to express your ideas more efficiently and uniquely. For example, if someone is very excited about something, he can add “bounce off the walls” in his sentence. “I am bouncing off the walls for my today’s match”.

Idioms help in transforming dull writing into an impressive one. Some writers use idioms to add color to their writing. Using an idiom is much like using the slang of a particular field. For example, using “Your smile is live divine music” sounds just a bit more impressive than telling someone that your smile is good.

Understanding Idioms boosts one’s communication skills, it helps the speaker to be more fluent and impressive in their speech. because it shows native speakers that you understand the cultural meaning and context behind the idiom you’re using.
